ABOUT THE PUPFISH

Pupfish (Cyprinodon radiosus) began life in the Owens River valley more than 2.5 million years ago. Until a little more than 100 years ago the Owens pupfish was abundant throughout the valley. Then, due to loss of habitat and the introduction of non-native fish & frog species the pupfish almost became extinct.

In 1967 the Owens pupfish was declared an endangered species by the federal government. Two years later the last remaining pupfish were relocated – 800 fish in two buckets! Five populations of these fish are now established in small refuges in the valley where consistent spring flows and groundwater provide a suitable and sustainable habitat.

Measuring up to 2-½ inches in length, with an occasional large male a little longer, pupfish males become bright blue in color during spawning. The highly distinctive behavior of ‘tail wagging’ during courtship and contest resembles the action of a playful puppy – hence the name pupfish.
